Circulation Approaching 4,000 ... Collectors Throughout the Country

Send Their Praise and Proclaim the Need for Coin Trade Advertiser

Your Publisher Speaking

The experiences of the past few weeks have proven that this is the type of publication collectors want. We started the October 12th issue with a circulation of 2,226, since that time we have reached a circulation of almost 4,000.

Our guarantee to keep our circulation over 2,000 each week has been met, and will continue. The many cards and letters from collectors praising Coin Trade Advertiser for its story content and low advertising rates are appreciated. They are our added incentive to seek better ways to serve you.

The services we offer you are, as you know, knowledge of numismatics in general, and low advertising rates, through a subscription free publication.

Because we do not wish to charge a subscription fee, we must depend entirely on your advertising to meet publishing and mailing costs. Our printers have recognized the efforts we are making to serve you and give you a quality publication and have held their costs to a minimum. But, Uncle Sam's Postal Department operates at a loss most of the time, and simply won't lower his rates for postage.

Our efforts, yours and Coin Trade Advertiser's, must work together. You have coins to trade or sell, and we provide you with the means to do this, guaranteeing you a free circulation. This free circulation leaves the money that would be spent for subscriptions in your prospective traders' hands for buying or paying postage on the coins they wish to trade or want to buy. No other publication in the field of numismatics offers this service to collectors and dealers.

Where in these times of rising costs can you find anything free?

We want to work for you and serve you. To say we are not interested in making a small profit would be false; Coin Trade Advertiser was founded to serve the collectors and dealers of North America, with service uppermost in mind.

You ask for a publication such as this; I hope you will use it and let us serve you often.

MY NICKELS WORTH

by m. brooks

In my first column for Coin Trade Advertiser, I wrote about, and gave my views on mail bid sales. For the benefit of our new readers, I am repeating this column this week. I will return next week with more gems of thought. M.B.

Opinion has been flying thick over the past few weeks about the use of mail bid sales. So, I thought I would get my nickels worth in on the subject.

What is a mail bid sale? My definition is simply this: "It is a method whereby coin collectors compete against each other by submitting bids on coins offered for sale. The high bidder receiving the coin, and paying for same at the price he has stated he will pay on his bid sheet."

This definition does not cover all the details and responsibility encountered when talking about mail bid sales. Both seller and bidder assume responsibilities when offering coins for sale through mail bid, or when bidding on coins. Let's explore the do's and don'ts.

First, the seller: Most important, he should guarantee that all coins offered for sale are genuine, and state the condition of each coin in the sale.

He should state what rules are to be followed when bidding on his material. (The statement, "Usual Rules Apply", tells collectors, especially new collectors, nothing). Most publications have set up rules for mail bid sales, sellers should either state their own rules, or refer bidders to the rules set down by the publication in which they announce their sale. I think the statement, "Usual Rules Apply", in mail bid sales, should be done away with, and a more exact method used by sellers to tell bidders what rules they are to follow.

All bids should be recorded in order received, in case of like bids, first bid received gets the lot. Sellers should state the time limit for returning coins to them by bidders. The time limit is most important, and should be specific, 3 days, 5 days, a week, etc. If reserved or minimum bids are made or used, they should be stated in the offer to sell.

In a nutshell, the seller should make it as easy as possible to bid on his material. If he does this, the material offered will sell at realistic prices, and the headaches of a poorly arranged sale will turn into a rewarding sale. The end result of any well planned, businesslike venture.

The bidder: First, and foremost, bidders should not make bids unless they intend to honor them. This has caused more friction, and caused more hard feelings, than any other problem facing collectors today. Here is the rule I have made for myself, "Don't bid unless you can back your bid with cash at the time the bid is submitted." If all collectors would adopt this rule, or one similar to it, one of the greatest problems affecting mail bid sales could be licked.

If you find it necessary to return a lot, don't just send it back without an explanation, be courteous, tell the person to whom you sent your bid the reason for the return.

Be very careful when making your bids, avoid mistakes. Make yourself a copy of your bid sheet and keep it at least six weeks after close of the sale. By doing this, should a mistake be made you will have proof of your bid. Follow the rules of the sale, they are there to protect both buyer and seller.

One thing I would like to see done by mail bid advertisers, and that is, offer a prices realized sheet to bidders on their sales. Many times I have bid on coins, never to hear of my bid again. I assumed another collector had outbid me, but I always wondered by how much. Had a prices realized sheet been available, I could have adjusted my bids in future sales. As it was, and is, I'm still in the dark.

The prices realized sheet I suggest would not have to be an elaborate thing, a mimeographed sheet listing the lots and prices realized on each would suffice. Collectors desiring this informa-

COLLECTORS' CORNERCanadian Collector Speaks

By Peter DeGraff
 Ottawa, Ontario, Canada

I started collecting approximately six years ago, when it was possible to find a Victorian or a 1948 dime, each time the contents of a vending machine were examined.

In those days, while looking through rolls of small cents, there seemed to be so many 1920, 21, 26, 27, 30 and 31 cents, (now selling at from 10c to $1.00) that most people just passed them along.

Brilliant Uncirculated 1948 Silver Dollars were selling for $5.00, and Newfoundland coins were still found in pocket change ... All this has changed now.

Victorian dimes can't be found in vending machines any more, neither can 1948 dimes. George V cents, once so common, are becoming increasingly scarce, and the 1948 Dollar now sells for upwards of $60.00. This has been caused by a phenomenal growth in the number of people collecting coins.

Some collectors are content to pick up just one coin of each year, others will put away as many as they can of the years in which fewer coins were made than some other years. This last practice is the reason prices for coins are continually on the rise.

It is very easy for someone with a few thousand dollars to buy up all available coins of a certain hard-to-get-date, by paying up to twice the amount the coin is worth. This action forces the value of the coin up to the amount this investor has been paying. It will be interesting to watch and see if this sort of thing will be helpful or harmful to collecting.

There will always be a supply of coins, for as soon as one coin becomes almost extinct, another year will be in demand, as is the case with the small cents.

New collectors will be helped by periodic dumping of key coins on the market by hoarders. Some collectors will become discouraged, because they can't seem to complete a collection. When these people decide to "throw in the towel" they place their coins on the market thereby aiding new collectors.

The popularity of coin collecting is also bringing coins from attics and basements, which without the publicity coin collecting is receiving, would never be available to collectors.

It is my opinion that coin collecting and all the excitement accompanying it has yet to reach its peak in popularity.

tion could enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope along with their bids. It would certainly help those collectors who use mail bid sales as a regular means of adding to their collection. It would also provide a trend as to what collectors are willing to pay for a certain coin.

Mail bid sales are fast becoming the most popular method for collectors to obtain coins for a collection. If this popularity is to continue, both seller and buyer must do their utmost to make the "Armchair Auction" a fair and honest business transaction between both parties. Honesty, integrity, understanding and co-operation. Let these guide you as you sit in your armchair, Red Book in hand, deciding what you will bid on the coin you have wanted for so long.
